Why Choose Us

Our program aims to help first responders understand the autism spectrum disorder, recognize someone that might be on the spectrum, how to interact with them, and how to best manage risk in high-stress situations.

Who is the trainer?

Every training is led by a first responder who has a family member on the autism spectrum. This free training program addresses effective communication methods while providing practical skills to first responders on how to successfully interact with a person on the autism spectrum during an emergency situation.

Trainings can be in-person or virtual and are scheduled on a date and time most convenient for your department.

Email us at thearc@arcsc.org or call us at 803-748-5020 for more information.

What is the ALERT Program?

ALERT provides training for First Responders so they can better serve people with Autism in an emergency situation.
